Midday...

The winds have picked up considerably, although I must admit I welcome the added speed it brings the Ararat. I am told there is an uneasiness amongst the crew with regard to the Serpent's Pillar. An old sailor's myth no doubt, but ask any man worth his salt on the sea and they'll embellish a tail of misfortune and mishap almost always blamed on some way to the pillar. I received a report of a minor fray amongst some of the men regarding one of these myths. Cobb has informed me he dealt with the issue swiftly and it should not be a problem again. Amongst my officers I have sailed with Rogers the least, yet the high remarks of other Captains allowed my decision to bring him aboard with little hesitation. He has proven himself as courageous as the stories say...to think any man would be brave enough to wrestle a Kraken!
